SUMMER SWEET CLOVER FEEDING

If sweet clover is to be seeded at this time of the year, the College of Agriculture recommends that it be done early in August. The early fall seeding will permit sufficient growth to prevent wrinkling. In the western part of the state spring seeding is probably to be preferred. In general the same preparation of the seed bed should be given for sweet clover as for alfalfa. The rate of seeding is 20 to 25 pounds of the hulled seed per acre. Under very favorable conditions some farmers have obtained good stands from seeding 15 pounds. The seed should be sown broadcast and be covered with a smoothing harrow set rather slanting or else with a grain drill with a grass seed attachment. In either case the seed should not be covered more than three-fourths of an inch deep. Further information concerning sweet clover may be obtained from Extension Bulletin No. 22 upon application to the Bulletin Clerk, University Farm, Lincoln.

UNBALANCED MENUS

An abundance of food on the table does not necessarily mean that the needs of the body will be satisfied. The meal may be so planned that it will contain too much or too little of the food nutrients. For instance the following meal contains too much protein: Creamed potatoes, roast beef, cottage cheese, bread and butter, and mince pie. It might be improved by substituting lettuce salad and orange snow pudding for the cottage cheese and mince pie. The following meal is lacking in protein and is too high in carbohydrates: Baked potatoes, creamed rice, scalloped corn, bread and butter and tapioca pudding. It might be improved by substituting macaroni and cheese, and baked custard for the rice and pudding. The following meal contains too much fat: Pork chops, mashed potatoes, peas with drawn butter sauce, bread and butter, and nut pudding with whipped cream. It might be improved by substituting apple salad and cherry tapioca pudding for the peas and nut pudding with whipped cream.—Department of Home Economics, University Farm.

VACCINATE FOR INFECTIOUS PNEUMONIA

In hog cholera there is sometimes found a condition commonly called "swine plague" or "infectious pneumonia" where the lungs seem to be the only part of the animal affected, and many believed that this condition could not be combated by the use of serum. At the serum plant at the University Farm, blood from typical cases of swine plague injected into susceptible pigs developed the acute type of cholera without lung complications. It was found that the serum would protect against blood from these pigs as well as against the blood from hogs showing normal cholera symptoms. Serum has been used against several outbreaks in Nebraska where the post-mortem lesions were those of swine plague and was found potent to protect against this form of cholera as well as against those cases where the lesions were entirely those of hog cholera.

Whenever a disease that is contagious appears among hogs, spreading more or less rapidly, is quite uniformly fatal, and is accompanied by a high temperature, it is quite safe to assume that it is cholera.—Department of Animal Pathology, University of Nebraska.

FOURTH SPRAY FOR APPLES.

A fourth spray for apples should be applied about July 20 to combat the second brood of codling moth worms, according to the Department of Horticulture at the University Farm. This spray consists of 2.5 pounds of lead arsenate paste for each 50 gallons of water. If the powdered lead arsenate is used, only one-half this amount is necessary. The spray should be applied as a fine mist.

NEW COURSE IN AGRICULTURE.

A two-year course in agriculture is being offered by the College of Agriculture this fall for the first time. The catalog says that the course is intended to meet the need of those students who desire to return to the farm and who can spend only two years in college work. The course is almost wholly a study of practical agriculture.

At the end of two years a certificate will be granted for proficiency in practical agriculture, upon satisfying the requirements of proficiency in practical farm experience.

CHARACTERISTICS OF GOOD MEAT

Beef should be firm and elastic to the touch. It should also be bright red and be well streaked with fat. Veal should be pink. It is somewhat less firm than beef. If watery and flabby it is too young. Mutton is a duller red and firm. The fat is white or slightly yellow and hard.

Lamb is pink rather than red and is slightly less firm than mutton.

Pork is rather pale and is somewhat less firm than beef and mutton and the fat is softer.—College of Agriculture, University Farm.

LATE CORN CULTIVATION

Some farmers claim to have increased their yield of corn very greatly by late cultivation between the rows. It may be that under certain conditions late cultivations may be of value. For instance, if the ground is heavy and runs together during a heavy, dashing rain; if later this ground comes up to weeds, crusts badly, and becomes filled with cracks, there is reason to think that cultivation would have been of some value. Under such circumstances, however, cultivation must be given early enough after the rain to prevent the field getting into this condition. Attempting to cultivate a field, once it has reached this condition, seems to do more harm than good. On the other hand the repeated stirring of the soil which is already dry, weed-free, and loose on top would seem to be useless. Unfortunately such few experiments as have been carried on thus far have not proved that late cultivation is beneficial.—Junior corn bulletin, College of Agriculture.

TAKE THE TEMPERATURE

The man who has not the time to take the temperatures and vaccinate accordingly has no business vaccinating hogs. Without taking this precaution, the operator is working in the dark. Failure to take temperatures in infected herds and to give an increased dose of serum has been the cause of bringing the whole serum treatment into disrepute in certain communities. All pigs vaccinated showing a high temperature should be marked either by placing a nose ring in one ear or by cutting across the hair with a pair of shears. If the cut is made of good length and always in the same place, those pigs can be easily picked out. For accurate information this is important.—Department of Animal Pathology, University of Nebraska.

Her place is said to have been elegantly furnished. She gave freely to charitable institutions. In later years she left Pearl street and operated in other parts of the business district.

Sioux City Journal, 19: After a series of meetings lasting two weeks the Free Methodist tent services at South Sioux City were ended last night with a communion service. Rev. A. T. Sager, the evangelist in charge, will depart today for Boone, Ia., where he will conduct similar meetings. It had been planned to hold the communion service at the close of the morning meeting, but because of the bad weather few attended the service. A small congregation, composed entirely of men, attended the meeting last night. Rev. Sager preached upon the need of confessing one's sins. He gave scriptural and modern instances to show that a person's sins will always expose him. Although a large crowd gathered outside the tent last night to witness the meeting, there was no disturbance. Inside the tent both the preaching and praying were conducted with an absence of clamor. A meeting of elders will be held tonight at the home of Rev. G. Gilmore, pastor of the church.

Sioux City Journal, 17: Charles W. Sharen is a "special officer" of South Sioux City. He is the only man in South Sioux City who has police powers received from Mayor C. J. Kloster. The mayor said last night that Sharen would act in the position to which he has been appointed until the next regular meeting of the city council. Sharen was named chief of police by Mayor Kloster shortly after his inauguration. The council, however, refused to confirm Sharen. Then the mayor acted as chief of police until, under authority granted him by a city ordinance, he appointed U. G. Castor a "special officer." At the regular council meeting this month Castor presented his bill for $37.50 for services rendered as chief of police and street commissioner. The council ordered the bill paid, but refused to grant police powers to Castor. The council decided that Castor could continue in the service of the city as a "common laborer," authorized to work on the streets. To this designation of "common laborer" Castor objected. He resigned from being a "common laborer." Then Mayor Kloster once more officiated as police chief. Mayor Kloster said last night that Sharen's "beat" is on the ground where the Free Methodists are holding their revival.

Sioux City Journal, 18: A permanent summer camp is to be established by the Wall Street mission at the north end of Crystal lake. The camp is made possible by the gift of a site to the mission by F. W. Lohr, a lawyer, who owns considerable land at that end of the lake. The site which has been given to the mission is near some timbered land. Mr. Lohr has given the mission permission to cut the timber needed in the erection of a house, and this work will be done by the boys who have been having advantage of the mission classes. They also will assist in the erection of the building. A small building will be placed on the lot immediately and the boys will take turns living there while they are erecting the large house. A building about 40x60 feet will be erected for the permanent camp. Next year a still larger structure will be placed on the lot, according to Rev. Maurice E. Levitt, superintendent of the mission. This will give the mission an opportunity to give the boys and the girls of the district in which the mission is located a week or two of camp life, he said. Rev. A. T. Sager, the evangelist conducting the Free Methodist tent meetings in South Sioux City, was contradicted last night when he made certain statements at the meeting concerning hell. His opponent, F. Buckstan, stood on the sidewalk and disputed Rev. Sager's announcements until Charles Sharen, the town marshal, made him move on. Rev. Sager was preaching upon the possibilities of repentance in hell when Mr. Buckstan arrived. "In hell there is no repentance, no sorrow nor any love," shouted Rev. Sager. "You are mistaken, brother," shouted back Mr. Buckstan. "The scriptures say, 'The mercy of the Lord endureth forever.'" Rev. Sager attempted to continue his sermon, but was continually interrupted by Mr. Buckstan, who declared that "the preacher was nothing but a bag of wind" and that "the Methodist doctrine was going to have its legs knocked from under it when the day of judgment came." About that time Marshal Sharen put in an appearance and Buckstan disappeared. When members of the congregation and Rev. Sager arrived at the tent last night they found it flat on the ground. Guy ropes had been cut, stakes pulled up, and even the ropes which fastened the canvas at the top of the center pole had been loosened. Members of the congregation busied themselves and soon had the tent pitched ready for the evening service. Despite the order of Mayor C. J. Kloster Friday, the shouting and loud praying was resumed last evening. Today will be the closing day for the evangelist in South Sioux City. This morning the Lord's supper will be observed and a "love feast" held. The services will commence at 9:30 o'clock. A love feast is known as a testimonial meeting. Preaching will be held at 7:30 o'clock.
